PREFACE

The Standard Occupational Classification (SOC) 1991 continues a tradition established in 1971, with the publication of the Canadian Classification and Dictionary of Occupations (CCDO) by the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the related Occupational Classification Manual published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The latter was revised and published by Statistics Canada as the Standard Occupational Classification 1980, in which considerable attention was given to incorporating revisions to the CCDO, so that occupational data from statistical surveys and data derived from administrative records, vocational education and training programs and employment related programs, could continue to be brought together.

The SOC 1991 is based on the National Occupational Classification (NOC) developed by Employment and Immigration Canada in consultation with Statistics Canada. The SOC 1991 and the NOC, share the same unit groups, many of which are more homogeneous in terms of skill than in previous classifications. Also, more emphasis is placed on occupations in the services component of the labour market, to reflect the increased importance of this sector in the economy.

The SOC 1991 is a statistical classification, designed as Statistics Canada's official classification for the collection and dissemination of occupational data. It features a set of major groups which are different from those of the NOC. The existence of two sets of major groups serving different analytical purposes, to which occupational data can be aggregated from a common set of unit groups, enhances the usefulness of the broader system.

The Standard Occupational Classification 1991 is published by Standards Division, Shaila Nijhowne, Director. The publication was prepared by Wayne Silver and Rodger O. Lee of Standards Division, with the assistance of Pat Grainger and Sandra Swain of Labour and Household Surveys Analysis Division and Jack Bailey, Douglas Cameron, Joann Casey, Cathy Connors, Carl Kritsch and Anthony Malfara of Standards Division. The contribution of Employment and Immigration Canada to the development of the classification is gratefully acknowledged.

INTRODUCTION

INTRODUCTION

The 1991 Standard Occupational Classification (SOC) is based on the National Occupational Classification (NOC)[1] and is designed as a classification manual for use in statistical surveys and other purposes. It provides a systematic classification structure to identify and categorize the entire range of occupational activity in Canada.

The basic principle of classification of the SOC is that of kind of work performed. Occupations are, therefore, identified and grouped primarily in terms of the work usually performed, this being determined by the tasks, duties, and responsibilities of the occupation. Factors such as the materials processed or used, the industrial processes used, the equipment used, the degree of responsibility and complexity of work, the products made and services provided, have been taken as indicators of the work performed when combining jobs into occupations and occupations into groups.

An occupation is defined as a collection of jobs, sufficiently similar in work performed to be grouped under a common title for classification purposes. A job, in turn, encompasses all the tasks carried out by a particular worker to complete her/his duties.

Thus, within each group, the occupations are almost unique and are related to each other by similarity of kind of work performed. This approach to the grouping of occupations ensures a certain homogeneity within groups and permits a distinction between groups.

By focusing on work performed, the groups also tend to be homogeneous by skill level. This is natural because the nature of the work to be performed determines the education, training, experience or inherent talents required.

At the lower levels of aggregation of occupations, termed "unit groups" and "minor groups" this focus on grouping by similarity of work performed has resulted in unit groups and minor groups that are also homogeneous by skill level. At the second highest level of aggregation termed "Major Groups" broad fields of work are sometimes represented, rather than specific types of work performed. At the highest level of aggregation of occupations termed "Broad Occupational Categories", very broad fields of work are represented rather than specific types of work performed. Such broad groupings, by their very nature, reflect skill types rather than skill levels.

RELATED CLASSIFICATIONS

For statistical purposes, the classification of occupations does not stand alone but must be understood as being related to other classifications such as the Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) and that of class of worker. Each of the aforementioned classifications supplements the SOC in presenting a rounded picture of the nature of a person's job.

More specifically, the industrial qualifier which may accompany the job title:

(a) Indicates the type of economic activity with which the job is usually associated. (It is important to note that the assignment of an industrial qualifier does not necessarily limit a job to that industry. These qualifiers are merely indicative of the possible areas of activity in which the job may be found.)

(b) Permits the assignment of similar occupational titles to different occupation groups where the duties vary as between industries.

(c) Aids in defining the specific occupations and helps the coder grasp the underlying principles of this classification.

The industry in which the individual is employed is determined by the kind of economic activity of the establishment. The establishment is usually a factory, mine, farm, store, other place of business or an institution for which a number of basic production variables can be compiled.

It is important to note the conceptual differences between an industry classification and an occupation classification. An establishment can employ individuals performing completely different occupations, and these are classified to appropriate occupational groups, but the industrial classification of each individual employed in the establishment should be the same and is determined by the nature of the product made or service rendered. In other words, the nature of the factory, business or service in which the person is employed does not determine the classification of the occupation, except to the extent that it enables the nature of the duties to be more clearly defined.

Also, an individual's employment relationship to the business in which the person is engaged, as self employed, employee or unpaid family worker i.e., class of worker, provides another means of describing the work. This is usually indicated by the form of remuneration the worker receives. The self-employed depend upon a residual return in the form of profit, while employees are paid wages or salaries and unpaid family workers receive no set remuneration. In the 1991 SOC, the class of worker classification is not identified separately for each occupation since many occupations can be assigned to more than one category (i.e., working for wages, salary, tips or commission; working without pay in a family business or farm; self-employed without paid help; and self-employed with paid help). However, a general rule has been established for coding purposes and is discussed in full under the section on Coding Instructions.

THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE SOC 1991 AND THE NOC

The SOC 1991 is a statistical classification designed by Statistics Canada to classify data on occupations from the Census of Population and other Statistics Canada surveys. Although it is based on the National Occupational Classification there are some differences between the classifications that were necessary because of the special requirements of a statistical classification.

At the unit group level, small differences exist between the two classifications. Extensive testing by Statistics Canada determined that a small number of NOC unit groups could not be implemented in the Census of Population, either because the populations were too small to be statistically reliable or because the typical census response did not supply adequate information to classify it to the NOC unit group.

In total, sixteen NOC unit groups could not be implemented by Statistics Canada and were collapsed into eight related pairs to form eight unit groups in the SOC. These collapsed unit groups can be identified easily because the unique final digit of the SOC code for these groups is 0. These SOC unit groups and the related collapsed pairs are shown in Figure 1.

The SOC and the NOC also differ in their classification of military personnel. All military personnel are classified solely on the basis of rank to either one of two SOC unit groups: A353 Commissioned Officers, Armed Forces and G624 Other Ranks, Armed Forces. On the other hand, the NOC unit groups for military occupations (0643 Commissioned Officers, Armed Forces and 6464 Occupations Unique to the Armed Forces) are defined to include only those military personnel whose occupations do not have a civilian counterpart (e.g., infantry officers, artillery soldiers). Those military personnel whose occupations do have a civilian counterpart are classified in the unit group appropriate to the occupation (e.g., dental officers are classified with dentists and military police officers are classified with police officers).

The minor groups and broad occupational categories of the 1991 SOC are the same as those of the NOC, except to the extent of the variations created by the differences in the unit groups and the treatment of the military.

At the major group level, the SOC is quite different from the NOC. Similarity of work performed was the basic criterion used at all levels within the SOC even when this resulted in some major groups being heterogeneous by skill level. The other criteria used in the development of the SOC major groups were analytical usefulness and statistical balance. One example of the analytical usefulness of the major groups is their suitability for gender analysis. As a statistical classification, the population distribution for a level of aggregation is very significant for determining the statistical utility of the aggregation. The population of a class determines the amount of cross classification and geographic detail possible as well as the suitability of the class for surveys with a smaller sample. The SOC major groups were designed to have a population distribution that was as even as possible with a population minimum that was sufficient to be used by the Census of Population for increased geographical detail and for cross classifications; and also to be suitable as detailed classes for the Labour Force Survey. The only other constraint was that they respect the boundaries of the broad occupational categories common to both classifications. The result was forty seven major groups. The work performed focus and the population criterion used to create these groups resulted in skill type groups many of which are also homogeneous by skill level. The user that requires skill level groups can use, as an alternative, the major groups of the NOC. Since there are only twenty six major groups in the NOC the choice of skill level results in a certain loss of occupational detail. It should be noted that thirty six of the forty seven SOC major groups are homogeneous by skill level according to the NOC criteria.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

Structure

The Standard Occupational Classification manual contains the classification structure and definitions for Broad Occupational Categories, major, minor and unit groups as well as two separate indices. A classified index lists individual occupational titles arranged alphabetically within their respective unit groups. An alphabetical index presents the occupational titles in alphabetical order, irrespective of group association.

The occupational groups are such that, within each broad occupational category, one or more major groups are identified; within each major group, one or more minor groups are identified and within each minor group one or more unit groups. A functional relationship is reinforced by means of the coding system.

For example:

A MANAGEMENT OCCUPATIONS

A0 SENIOR MANAGEMENT OCCUPATIONS

A01.001	Legislators and Senior Management
A011.0011	Legislators
A012.0012	Senior Government Managers and Officials
A013.0013	Senior Managers - Financial, Communications Carriers and Other Business Services
A014.0014	Senior Managers - Health, Education, Social and Community Services Membership Organizations
A015.0015	Senior Managers - Trade, Broadcasting and Other Services, n.e.c.
A016.0016	Senior Managers - Goods Production, Utilities, Transportation and Construction

It should be noted that the broad occupational category code designated by a capital letter is repeated at all levels, as is the major group code designated by the first digit after the letter. The minor group code designated by the second digit after the letter is repeated at the unit group level. The unit group is designated by the third digit after the letter. For the minor and unit groups a two part numbering system has been adopted. After the dot there is a further four digit code, this is the actual NOC code and indicates the skill level of the group within the NOC structure.

Abbreviations

Few abbreviations are used in this classification. Particular attention should be given to the abbreviation n.e.c. (not elsewhere classified). As an occupational qualifier it is occasionally used in the labels of major, minor and unit groups to refer to occupations not elsewhere classified; e.g. A3 Other Managers n.e.c.

Language

The 1991 SOC is published separately in both official languages. It is important to note that the French version includes only titles commonly used in French and proper to the milieu and, therefore, these are not normally translations of the English titles. The classification structure is the same in both versions.

Alphabetical Arrangement in the Indices

Each word in a title is taken separately for purposes of alphabetical arrangement. The following titles would be found in this order in the index:

Bridge keeper
Bridge opener
Bridge tender
Card grinder
Carder
Caretaker
Carpenter
Carton wrapper

Relating the 1991 SOC to the 1980 SOC

The 1991 SOC is a completely new classification and should not be viewed as a revision of the 1980 SOC. There are very few unit groups with a one to one correspondence. Users should be aware that although the labels of various levels of aggregation in one classification suggest a correspondence with the other, this is usually not the case. For example, unit group C021 Biologists and Related Scientists has the identical label in the 1980 SOC. The classes do not have identical contents, however, as biochemists were classified as biologists in the 1980 SOC but are classified as chemists in the 1991 SOC. Detailed concordance tables are provided with this classification and users are cautioned that they should be consulted before assuming any correspondence based on the similarity of class labels in the two classifications.

Concordance Tables

The Concordance Tables were constructed by classifying the example job titles of each classification according to the other. This produced a preliminary set of linkages that was verified according to the respective class definitions. A certain amount of judgement was required, as some job titles were either ambiguous or had multiple meanings. Also some occupational titles in the 1980 SOC originated from much older source documents and the jobs are now considered obsolete. Linkages established on the basis of such titles were also eliminated from the final correspondence tables.

Coding

As explained earlier, the SOC as a classification manual, provides an overall structure for classifying occupations according to kind of work performed. When used as a coding manual, the classified and alphabetical indices are merely indicative of the types of occupations that fit within specific unit groups. The list of occupational titles is not exhaustive nor is it intended to be.

When coding an occupation, all the relevant facts about the job and its environment should be obtained. These include the kind of work performed, the most important activities or duties, the job titles, the kind of business, industry or service, and the class of worker described earlier. The more complete and comprehensive the information the coder is able to assemble about the tasks performed by a worker on a particular job, the easier it will be to determine the appropriate classification.

To code an occupation, it is possible to start with either the classified index or the alphabetical index.

Using the Classified Index

When using the classified index it is best to exploit the hierarchical nature of the classification. First the broad occupational category which seems most likely to contain the job should be identified. Next the most appropriate major group within the broad occupational category should be found. The process should be continued to find the most appropriate minor group within the major group selected. Finally the most appropriate unit group within the minor group selected should be identified. As before the unit group definition should be read carefully before deciding if this unit group offers the best possible classification, but in addition the example titles listed within the unit group should be examined to ensure that the choice is actually the best.

Using the Alphabetical Index

(a) First the occupation in the alphabetical index of the occupational classification should be found. After locating the title and its four-digit code whether the title is listed only once in the alphabetical index should be checked, and the corresponding four-digit code noted. If listed more than once, the corresponding industrial qualifiers should be checked and the one which relates most closely to the one stated by the respondent selected. Using this code as a guide, the definition for the unit group to which this title belongs in the classified index should be found. The entire definition should be read carefully and the classified index checked before deciding whether it is the most appropriate classification.

(b) If the title cannot be found or if the definition appears inappropriate, another title, should be looked for. Some clues are:

(1) look for the noun form: answering the phone will be a Receptionist or Telephone Clerk

(2) shorten the title: Electronic Data Processor to Data Processor

(3) find a synonym: Aircraft Mechanic for Jet Mechanic

(4) If the title is inverted, look for it in its natural order e.g. Manager, store may be listed under Store manager

(5) Consider such factors as:

Job location - Tunnel Worker; Bridge Keeper

Kind of machines used - Cement-Mixer Operator; Hydraulic Riveter

Material used - Concrete Mason; Leather Handbag Maker

Subject matter - Music Cataloguer; Press Clipper

Activity performed - Locomotive Inspector; Bodyshop Foreman/Woman

Job skills - Surgical Instrument Repairer; Tool Machinist

Coding Procedures for Problem Responses

The procedure described above assumed responses that contained sufficient information for coding. Unfortunately, depending upon the survey methods used, some responses may be problematic. This occurs when the information in the response is either vague or contradictory. Experience at Statistics Canada suggests the following approches to resolving such problems.

Vague Responses

In previous occupational classifications there was a systematic provision of not elsewhere classified classes that were used to code vague responses. Since there were occupations classified in these classes, it was not possible to determine what proportion of the population was represented by these occupations and what proportion was due to vague responses. The 1991 SOC has few nec classes and a different approach to vague responses is required. It is suggested that the response be coded only to the level within the classification that is possible. Of course before doing so, any information that is available about the respondent should be consulted.

Education

This is especially useful in coding occupational responses that are vague. The most reliable way of using education is as an exclusionary edit. Certain occupations require a minimum education and it is possible to exclude vague responses from being coded to such occupations if the respondent does not have the minimum education required. Great care must be taken when using education in occupational coding and it should only be used as a last resort.

Contradictory Response Information

Sometimes the responses will give an occupational title and a description of work performed that are contradictory. A response "labourer, driving dump truck" is contradictory in terms of the classification as driving a truck is not considered elemental work. This response should be coded as a truck driver in H711 Truck Drivers.

In general it is best to let the description of the work performed predominate over occupational titles when coding.

Some occupational titles can be misleading. Titles that have manager as part of the title are sometimes not managers. For example project managers and case managers are usually not managers and must be coded based on a description of their work. Special care must be given to responses that have manager, labourer, or consultant as part of the title as these terms have a variety of meanings in the workplace.

Two or More Occupations

Where two or more occupations are reported in reply to a question on occupation, the first one mentioned should be coded unless there is additional information to suggest otherwise.

Classification Rules

Managers

Managers are usually classified to the broad occupational category A Management Occupations. Within this category the senior managers that are the top of a management hierarchy as denoted by terms such as president, chief executive officer, etc. are classified in major group A0 Senior Management Ocuupations.

Managers with a management specialty, such as human resource management, are classified according to specialty in major group A1 Specialist Managers. However, senior managers with a specialist responsibility would be classified with senior management in major group A0 Senior Management Occupations.

An attempt has been made to isolate many of the managers of small businesses by classifying managers of retail stores, restaurants, hotels and similar businesses in a separate major group A2 Managers in Retail Trade, Food and Accomodation Services.

All other managers, with the following exceptions, are classified according to the type of business managed within major group A3 Other Managers n.e.c.

Some managers are not classified to the managerial groups. For example, farm managers and other managers in the agriculture and landscaping are not classified as managers but to the appropriate unit group from the following:

I011 Farmers and Farm Managers
I012 Agricultural Service Contractors
I014 Nursery and Greenhouse Operators
I015 Landscaping and Grounds Maintenance Contractors
I017 Aquaculture Operators

Proprietors

As a general rule the class of worker status, that is, whether the respondent works for wages or is self-employed with or without paid help, is not considered for classification purposes. An exception is made for proprietors in retail trade, food and accomodation services and residential home building. These are classified as managers to the following unit groups:

A211 Retail Trade Managers
A221 Restaurant and Food Service Managers
A222 Accommodation Service Managers
A372 Residential Home Builders

Contractors

Contractors are classified in several areas of the classification. General Contractors in construction are classified in unit group A371 Construction Managers. Renovation contractors and home building contractors are classified in unit group A372 Residential Home Builders and Renovators.

Contractors specializing in a specific trade such as plumbing, electrical, carpentry, etc., are classified together with supervisors to the appropriate unit group for that trade. That is, a plumbing contractor is classified to unit group H013 Contractors and Supervisors, Pipefitting Trades.

Supervisors and Foremen/Women

Supervisors are classified to separate unit groups for supervisors where they exist. These are found in the following major groups for supervisors:

- B4 Clerical Supervisors
- G0 Sales and Service Supervisors
- H0 Supervisors and Contractors in Trades and Transportation
- J0 Supervisors in Manufacturing

These unit groups for supervisors are found outside of supervisor major groups:

- D111 Head Nurses and Supervisors
- I013 Farm Supervisors and Specialized Livestock Workers
- I111 Supervisors, Logging and Forestry
- I121 Supervisors, Mining and Quarrying
- I122 Supervisors, Oil and Gas Drilling and Service

Where a separate unit group does not exist, supervisors are classified with the workers supervised. For example, most areas in the Professional Major Group there are no separate unit groups for Supervisors. The one exception being unit group D111 Head Nurses and Supervisors.

Technical occupations follow a similar rule and there are no separate unit groups for supervisors in this area.

Even where separate supervisory unit groups exist, "lead hands" are not classified to them as previous research has indicated that supervision is usually only a minor part of such jobs.

Apprentices

Apprentices are classified as tradesmen/women. For example an apprentice carpenter is considered a carpenter and is classified to unit group H121 Carpenters.

Helpers

Helpers are usually considered as labourers. Most helpers will be found in the building trades such as carpenter's helper, mason's helper, roofer's helper, etc. These jobs are not to be confused with formal apprenticeships and are not classified as tradesmen/women but are classified to unit group H821 Construction Trades Helpers and Labourers.

Labourers

Labourers are classified in separate unit groups in the following major groups and minor groups:

- I2 Primary Production Labourers
- J3 Labourers in Manufacturing and Utilities
- H82 Trades Helpers and Labourers
- H83 Public Works and Other Labourers n.e.c.

Sample Questions for Obtaining Occupation Information

The following questions indicate the type of information and the format that could be used to obtain the facts necessary to classify an occupation.

a) For whom did you work?
Name of firm, government agency, etc.
Department, branch, division, section or plant

b) What kind of business, industry or service was this?
Give full description; for example, paper box manufacturing, road construction, retail shoe store, secondary school, dairy farm

c) What kind of work were you doing?
Give full description; for example, accounting clerk, sales representative, civil engineer, secondary teacher, garage foreman/woman, metal worker.

d) In this work, what were your most important activities or duties?
For example, verifying invoices, selling electrical tools, managing the research department, teaching mathematics, supervising auto mechanics, operating lathe
(If in the armed forces, give rank.)

e) In this job were you mainly:
Working for wages, salary, tips or commission?
Working without pay on a family farm or in a business?
Self-employed without paid help?
Self-employed with paid help?
